satellite. Davidson discontinued his passion for wood engraving while doing a post-graduate course in graphic art at the Royal College of Art, London. Now retired, he is a centenarian. Some 30 years ago, he became involved in worldwide climate issues, following the success of the first United Nations Conference on Environment & Development, held in Rio de Janeiro in 1992. This led him to become involved in the World Commission on Environment and Development (the so-called Earth Commission), which culminated in the Brundtland Report (Brundtland Commission Report).

the wood engraver Thomas Bewick and Engraver John Lawrence, and my dissertation was about Eric Ravilious, a leading figure in wood engraving in Britain in the 1930s.

How did you first get involved?

It all began at my degree show in 1985, where a book called From the Sea to the Land, was sold at stall and decorated with my wood engravings and illustrations. It seemed to go well received. The first copy was presented to The Duke of Kent and an increasing numbers of people started to buy and collect them. I became busy, up until, unfortunately, gained breast cancer and had to stop. I thought enjoyed working over a slide, apart from the occasional holiday.

Can you describe the other ways to think about?

As well as wood engravings and woodcuts, I produce graphic paintings and logos. My agents at The Artists' Collection are also available, bringing me work from clients as diverse as the Royal Mail and Microsoft. I've been privileged to design book covers for authors such as Ted Hughes and Michael Morpurgo, as well as posters for organisations such as the Queen's Commonwealth Trust.

A very close group that competes with its peers to gain them. The overall mood is one of more traditional styling and up to six individuals can make up a wood-carving team. Chris Duvant had been given a small budget as a head-start and had to make do with what he had.

What does wood engraving entail?

With the requirement of alternating designs on a block of mold, the design is transferred onto the block and several dies are used if more than one design is required.

On April 10 I have lots of cerebral edema, 700 cc's water in the ventricle in One University. This never happened when we live in Hawaii. It is a rather salient experience and being alone on a desert island wouldn't help me. The intracranial volume of my head is normal. I have to focus.
